How to Watch 2026 MLS All-Stars vs. Liga MX All-Stars on TV, Live Stream

For the fifth time in the last six years, the best of MLS take on the best of Liga MX in a star-studded clash for nothing more than bragging rights.

The MLS All-Star Game, a tradition since 1996, has recently become a battle between the two biggest leagues in North America, showcasing the top talent competing in MLS and Liga MX. This year's edition features players from 21 MLS clubs and eight Liga MX sides.

Even without Lionel Messi in their ranks, the MLS All-Stars head into Wednesday's clash full of confidence considering they have won three of the four bouts with Liga MX's best. Last year, they secured a dominant 3–1 victory, getting some payback after a lopsided 4–1 defeat the year prior.

The Liga MX All-Stars will be out for revenge this time around, and an entertaining battle awaits for those who wish to tune in.

How to watch the 2026 MLS All-Star Game tonight: TV Channel and Live Stream

After what has been two weeks of many MLS matchdays, it is time we set our eyes on the All-Star Game, where MLS players will battle against Liga MX footballers.

This marks the fifth time the event will take place, with MLS holding the advantage: three victories to just one defeat against the Mexican side. Last time, the US side won 3-1.

Now, let’s jump into the essential thing about how to watch the All-Star Game, because it is not available on any streaming service.

How to watch the 2026 MLS All-Star Game tonight in Charlotte
First, let’s review the key details we already know about the event. It is held at Bank of America Stadium in Charlotte at 8:00 p.m. ET.

Right now, MLS holds the advantage after taking the lead and having a much stronger squad than Liga MX.

The Mexican side will be led in attack by Salomón Rondón, while MLS boasts stars such as Heung-Min Son, Thomas Müller, and Evander.

On paper, this should be a comfortable win for the American league's side. However, this is soccer, and as it has shown plenty of times, anything is possible when it’s only one game.

Now, let’s talk about how you, readers, can watch this magnificent event, which should be at the end of the season, not at midseason, in my personal opinion.

You can watch the 2026 MLS All-Star Game between the MLS All-Stars and Liga MX All-Stars live exclusively on Apple TV.

As it happens with the MLS regular season, all the streaming rights for this scenario are held by Apple TV, meaning that if you don't have the platform, you can’t watch the match.

Given the strength of this MLS squad, here's my prediction for the match. Considering Liga MX's weaknesses and the significant upgrades MLS has made to its roster, this game should end in a 3-1 or 3-0 victory for MLS.

I expect a repeat of last year's scoreline in Austin, or perhaps an even more convincing win, with Liga MX failing to get on the scoresheet.

It is true that it would be beautiful to see Lionel Messi play at least one event during his time in the league. However, looking at the path, it is almost impossible to see the GOAT playing in the All-Star Game.

He has been in MLS for three years and has never played once. This year, he won’t receive a suspension because he was allowed a 21-day vacation period after playing the World Cup final.
